Special Issue on

Interpersonal Psychotherapy and Psychology

Call for Papers

The way we perceive ourselves in relation to the rest of the world influences our behaviors and our beliefs. The opinions of others also affect our behavior and how we view ourselves. Social psychologists are interested in all aspects of interpersonal relationships and the ways that psychology can improve those interactions. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of advances in interpersonal psychotherapy and psychology.

In this special issue, we invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles that explore interpersonal psychotherapy and psychology. In this special issue, potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Positive relationship
- Interpersonal psychotherapy
- Interpersonal skills
- Neurobiology of interpersonal connections
- Intimate relationship
- Adult attachment
- Benefits of satisfying relationships
