Special Issue on

Psychological Perspectives on Motivation

Call for Papers

Motivation is the reason for people's actions, willingness and goals. Motivation is derived from the word motive which is defined as a need that requires satisfaction. These needs could also be wants or desires that are acquired through influence of culture, society, lifestyle, etc. or generally innate. Motivation is one's direction to behavior, or what causes a person to want to repeat a behavior, a set of force that acts behind the motives. An individual's motivation may be inspired by others or events (extrinsic motivation) or it may come from within the individual (intrinsic motivation). Motivation has been considered as one of the most important reasons that inspires a person to move forward.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Psychological Perspectives on Motivation. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Stimulus, desires, intentions and achievement
- Cognitive theories of motivation
- Satisfaction and human behaviors
- Motivating factors and human actions
- Intrinsic and extrinsic motivation
- Social cognition and Self-regulation
- Efforts, performance and goals
- Self-determination and self-control

Authors should read over the journal’s For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal’s Paper Submission System.

Please kindly notice that the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title is supposed to be specified and the research field “Special Issue – Psychological Perspectives on Motivation” should be chosen during your submission.
