Special Issue on Microeconomics: Theory and Applications

Call for Papers

Microeconomics is a branch of economics that studies the behavior of individuals and firms in making decisions regarding the allocation of scarce resources and the interactions among these individuals and firms. One goal of microeconomics is to analyze the market mechanisms that establish relative prices among goods and services and allocate limited resources among alternative uses. Microeconomics shows conditions under which free markets lead to desirable allocations. It also analyzes market failure, where markets fail to produce efficient results.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Microeconomics: Theory and Applications. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Resources allocation
- Market mechanisms and structure
- Economic efficiency of markets
- Market equilibrium
- Monopoly and oligopoly
- Firm performance and competition
- Labor and capital
- Supply and demand
- Mergers & acquisitions
- Financial activities and behaviors
- General equilibrium theory
- Utility theory and price theory
- Effects of economic policies
- Real estate and finance
- Applications in other fields

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly notice that the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title is supposed to be specified and the research field “Special Issue – Microeconomics: Theory and Applications” should be chosen during your submission.
