Special Issue on Law and Social Development

Call for Papers

Law is an integral part of the overall change of society. It is not only the cause of social change, but also the result of social change. The Law is deeply implicated in our economic, political, and social worlds. Social development invariably involves an engagement with law and justice institutions. As a result, practitioners in the development field have turned increasing attention to reforms intended to improve law and justice institutions.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original researches and review articles on exploring law and social development. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- The role of law in development
- The common evolution of law and society
- Interaction between law and society
- Legal and judicial reform
- Human rights
- Economic development and law
- Legislation analysis
- Cases study
- Legal education

Authors should read over the journal’s For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal’s Paper Submission System.

Please kindly notice that the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title is supposed to be specified and the research field “Special Issue – Law and Social Development” should be chosen during your submission.
