Special Issue on Health Informatics

Call for Papers

Health informatics (also called health care informatics, healthcare informatics, medical informatics, nursing informatics, clinical informatics, or biomedical informatics) is information engineering applied to the field of health care, essentially the management and use of patient healthcare information. It is a multidisciplinary field that uses health information technology (HIT) to improve health care via any combination of higher quality, higher efficiency, and new opportunities. The disciplines involved include information science, computer science, social science, behavioral science, management science, and others.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Health Informatics. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Clinical Informatics
- Biomedical informatics
- Health information technology and management
- Clinical data processing and analysis
- Electronic medical records
- Personal health records
- Public health informatics
- Hospital information system
- Health systems
- Internet in clinical research
- Telemedicine
- Decision support system
- Health monitoring system

Authors should read over the journal’s For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal’s Paper Submission System.

Please kindly notice that the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title is supposed to be specified and the research field “Special Issue – Health Informatics” should be chosen during your submission.
