Special Issue on

International trade and Global Economy

Call for Papers

International trade is the exchange of capital, goods, and services across international borders or territories. In most countries, such trade represents a significant share of gross domestic product. While international trade has existed throughout history, its economic, social, and political importance has been on the rise in recent centuries.

Global economy is the economy of the world, considered as the international exchange of goods and services that is expressed in monetary units of account.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on International trade and Global Economy. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- International business and market development
- Imports and exports
- Investment and trade patterns
- Capital structure and regulation
- Trade policy and management
- Trade liberalization
- Trade barriers and openness
- WTO policy and regulation
- Competition and trade-off
- Financial crisis and global impact
- Monetary policy
- Foreign direct investment
- Global production and trade
- European economics and trade

Authors should read over the journal’s For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal’s Paper Submission System.

Please kindly notice that the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title is supposed to be specified and the research field “Special Issue – International trade and Global Economy” should be chosen during your submission.
