

Special Issue on Education and Information Technologies

Call for Papers

"Education and Information Technologies" is an academic field that explores the intersection of education and modern technology tools. It examines how information technologies, such as computers, mobile devices, and the internet, can be integrated into educational practices to enhance teaching and learning experiences. This interdisciplinary field investigates various aspects, including the design and development of educational software and digital learning resources, the use of technology to support instructional strategies and assessment methods, as well as the impact of technology on student engagement, motivation, and academic achievement. The aim is to unlock the potential of technology to improve educational outcomes and empower learners in an increasingly digital world.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Education and Information Technologies. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Online and distance learning
- Educational technology integration
- E-learning and blended learning
- Learning analytics
