

Special Issue on Social Science and Health

Call for Papers

Social Science and Health is an interdisciplinary field that explores the societal, cultural, and behavioral aspects of health and illness. It draws upon theories and methods from various social science disciplines, such as sociology, anthropology, psychology, and economics, to understand how social factors influence health outcomes. This area of study examines issues like health disparities, social support systems, health policies, and the role of social institutions in promoting or hindering health. By understanding these social determinants of health, Social Science and Health aims to improve individual and population health outcomes.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Social Science and Health. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Social and community medicine
- Social factors, interventions and health outcomes
- Health sociology
- Health, behavior and society
- Disease prevention, health promotion and public health
- Health psychology and mental care
- Socioeconomic factors
- Health communication and healthy behaviors
- Health education and promotion
- Gender and health studies
- Health beliefs, practices and cultural factors
- Global health
