

Special Issue on Cross-Cultural Studies

Call for Papers

The content of cross-cultural studies is the impact that culture has on an individual and his community, and the effects of this impact when different cultures are combined. The culture in which a person is raised plays a significant role in shaping his values, morals, behaviors and attitudes. Cultural differences can become most apparent when people from different cultures interact socially or in circumstances involving business. Cross-cultural studies refer to a method and a concept intended to emphasize the effort to get a wider perspective beyond certain limitations. Therefore, for cross-cultural research, it is necessary to propose a more complex interactive horizon on the basis of the theory of horizon fusion.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original researches and review articles on exploring cross-cultural studies. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:
