

Special Issue on Sociology Research

Call for Papers

Sociology is a discipline that uses empirical investigation and critical analysis to study the structure and activities of human society. Sociologists' research on society includes a series of studies from macro-structures to micro-behaviors, including race, ethnicity, class, and gender, as well as individual social relationship models as detailed as family structures. Sociologists often analyze groups, such as social classes, social organizations, religious organizations, political organizations and business organizations. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of Sociology Research.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Sociology Research. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Politics, economics and culture
- Culture, economics and sustainability
- Labor economics
- Welfare economics
- Production, cost, and efficiency
- Development economics
- Cultural area and culture change
- Inflation and monetary policy
- International economics theory and policy

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - Sociology Research” should be selected during your submission.
