Special Issue on Development Studies

Call for Papers

Development studies attempts to understand how society, regions, and communities change. At the same time, it discusses the concept and achievements of international development from various perspectives. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of Development Studies.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Development Studies. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Development policy, theory and analysis
- Poverty alleviation and international aid
- Climate change, environmental degradation and sustainable development
- Risk, vulnerability, and human security
- Political governance and civil society
- Gender relations and inequality
- Human rights and development
- Migration, urbanisation and development
- Children, youth and development
- Livelihoods and food security
- Social protection and social policy
- Economic development, work and industrialization

Authors should read over the journal’s For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal’s Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - Development Studies” should be selected during your submission.
