

Special Issue on Disability Studies

Call for Papers

Disability Studies critically examines disability as a social, cultural, and political phenomenon. It encompasses the study of disability from various perspectives, including social, historical, cultural, and legal dimensions. Disability Studies challenges traditional medical models that view disability solely as an individual impairment and instead focuses on understanding the social and environmental barriers that create disability. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of Disability Studies.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Disability Studies. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Intellectual disability
- Cognitive impairment
- Physical impairment
- Hearing impairment
- The deaf and blind
- Self-care ability
- Health risk behaviors
- Psychological distress
- Disability rights
- Disability identity
- Ableism
- Disability policy
- Assistive technology
- Disability and employment
- Disability and education
- Independent living
- Health disparities in disability
