

Special Issue on News Media and Sociology

Call for Papers

Research in News Media and Sociology focuses on the relationship between mass media and society. This field examines how news media shapes public opinion, influences social norms, and reflects cultural values. Scholars in this area analyze the role of journalism in a democratic society, the impact of media ownership and control on information dissemination, and the ways in which news coverage can shape public discourse. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of News Media and Sociology.

In this special issue, we invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles that explore News Media and Sociology. In this special issue, potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Media effects research
- Media ethics and regulation
- Sociology of news production
- The complex interplay between media and society
- How news media both reflects and shapes social reality
- Contemporary media systems and their impact on public opinion, social behavior, and cultural norms.

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - News Media and Sociology” should be selected during your submission.
