

Special Issue on English Language and Development

Call for Papers

English Language is originated from early medieval England. It has been spreading around the world since the 17th century by the worldwide influence of the British Empire and the United States. Now has become the leading language of international discourse and the lingua franca in many regions and professional contexts such as science, navigation and law. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of English Language and Development.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring English Language and Development. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Dialects, accents, and varieties
- English globalization
- English grammar
- English language and composition
- English language teaching and learning
- English language testing and assessment
- English literature
- Language contact and language change
- Oral English
- Origins and basic characteristics

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - English Language and Development” should be selected during your submission.
