

Special Issue on Psychology & Behavioral Sciences

Call for Papers

"Psychology & Behavioral Sciences" is an academic topic that examines human behavior and mental processes through the lens of psychological theories and research. It encompasses various sub-disciplines within the field of psychology and related behavioral sciences, aiming to understand and explain the complexities of human cognition, emotions, and behavior. This field of study explores topics such as perception, memory, learning, motivation, personality, social interactions, developmental processes, and psychological disorders. Researchers employ empirical methods, including experimental studies, surveys, observations, and theoretical models, to investigate and gain insights into the underlying mechanisms that shape human behavior and mental states. Psychology & Behavioral Sciences provide valuable insights into understanding human behavior, cognition, and emotional processes. The findings and theories developed in this field have practical applications in various settings, including clinical practice, education, business, and policy-making, contributing to individual well-being and societal advancements.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Psychology & Behavioral Sciences. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:
