

Special Issue on Positive Psychology and Human Relationships

Call for Papers

Positive Psychology and Human Relationships is an academic topic that explores the intersection between positive psychology principles and the dynamics of human relationships. Researchers in this field focus on understanding and promoting the factors that contribute to healthy and fulfilling relationships, such as empathy, communication, gratitude, forgiveness, and resilience. They investigate how positive emotions, strengths, and virtues can enhance the quality of relationships, including romantic partnerships, friendships, and family dynamics. The aim is to provide insights and interventions that can improve relationship satisfaction, well-being, and overall psychological health.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on Positive Psychology and Human Relationships. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Positive experiences and behavior
- Relationships management
- Character strengths, personality and emotions
- Optimism and emotional intelligence
- Positive emotion regulation
- Relationship satisfaction and well-being
- Positive communication and conflict resolution
- Emotional intelligence and relationship dynamics
- Gratitude and appreciation in relationships
- Forgiveness and relationship repair
- Resilience and relationship resilience
- Positive parenting and family relationships
